NetVUE Conference

Called into Community: Vocation, Engagement, and Difference

ANNOUNCEMENT AND CALL FOR PROPOSALS

March 24–26, 2022
Sheraton Dallas Hotel • Dallas, TX
www.cic.edu/2022NetVUEConference
The Council of Independent Colleges gratefully acknowledges the generous support of NetVUE by Lilly Endowment Inc.
The Council of Independent Colleges (CIC) is pleased to invite teams of campus leaders to the sixth national conference of the Network for Vocation in Undergraduate Education (NetVUE), which will be held March 24–26, 2022, at the Sheraton Dallas Hotel in Dallas, Texas. NetVUE is a nationwide campus-supported network administered by CIC that fosters vocational exploration and discernment among college and university students.

Under the theme “Called into Community: Vocation, Engagement, and Difference,” the 2022 NetVUE Conference will examine how attention to vocation and calling can draw us into deep engagement with the needs of the world, meaningful reflection on difference, and more sustained attention to the ways that these issues shape how we, and our students, think about our future directions in life. The conference will explore engagement and difference through various lenses: theological reflection across faith traditions, initiatives to develop future professional and civic leaders, and inquiries into issues of justice, inclusion, and the common good.

An array of distinguished speakers will address such topics as the call to be agents of change, the resilience of religion in higher education, and the importance of engaging with texts across traditions. Concurrent sessions will address issues of interest to NetVUE member institutions and offer opportunities to exchange ideas about vocational exploration in theory and practice. Campus teams are also invited to propose their own sessions on topics of interest to the larger membership. The entire conference is designed to provide participants with a wide range of resources to sustain and broaden the work of vocational reflection—in the classroom, the advising process, career development, campus ministry, community engagement, and other spheres of undergraduate life. Participants will also have opportunities to network with colleagues in similar roles at other institutions.

Each NetVUE member college and university is invited to designate a three- to five-person campus team, led by the president, chief academic officer, or another officer at the vice-presidential level. The team should include others who play key roles in helping undergraduates consider their vocations in relation to personal development, educational plans, and postgraduate choices. Campus representatives may include faculty members, academic affairs staff, student life staff, chaplains, vocation program directors, career services advisors, and others whose portfolios include helping students to consider their many callings in life.

Thanks to member dues and generous support from Lilly Endowment Inc., the registration fee of $950, which includes the costs of accommodation, all conference meals, and program materials, will be waived for three team members of NetVUE institutions. Additional team members—up to five total—may register at the institution’s expense. Participating institutions will be responsible for covering travel expenses for all team members; however, a limited number of travel grants are available in special circumstances (see page 23 for details).

While all NetVUE members are invited to participate, early registration is encouraged, as space is limited. Conference registrations received after January 31, 2022, will be accommodated only on a space-available basis.

HEALTH AND SAFETY

CIC and NetVUE are committed to the health and safety of those who work at their member institutions, as well as the communities to which these individuals belong. CIC is working closely with hotel staff at the Sheraton Dallas Hotel to ensure that all industry-standard cleaning and hygiene protocols will be met or exceeded throughout the NetVUE Conference.

To create the safest possible environment while offering meaningful opportunities for interaction, CIC expects that all participants who are able to receive the COVID-19 vaccine will be fully vaccinated at least two weeks before arriving at the conference. Please expect to be asked about your vaccination status when you register online. If you have been unable to receive the vaccine for any reason, please speak to a staff member to complete your registration.

Participants are expected to contribute to creating a safe event by respecting all national, local, and venue-specific health guidelines that may be in effect when the NetVUE Conference takes place. Updated information reflecting the most recent available guidance will be issued shortly before the event. By attending, participants agree to support their colleagues and communities by complying with public health recommendations that are in effect during the conference, as well as with the CIC Code of Conduct.
About NetVUE

The Network for Vocation in Undergraduate Education (NetVUE) is a nationwide association of more than 270 colleges and universities administered by CIC that supports students in the work of vocational exploration and discernment. Through national conferences and regional gatherings, faculty seminars and scholarly resources, campus visit and consulting programs, and a wide range of grant initiatives, NetVUE encourages member institutions to develop and extend vocation-related conversations and programming on their campuses. NetVUE is supported by member dues and by the generosity of Lilly Endowment Inc. An Advisory Council composed of representatives from member institutions guides CIC in the administration of NetVUE.

Biennial national conferences of NetVUE have been held since 2011, with the 2019 NetVUE Conference bringing together nearly 700 campus leaders from about 200 colleges and universities. NetVUE member institutions, most of which are rooted in the liberal arts, represent a wide range of religiously-affiliated institutions as well as many without specific religious ties. They are united by their commitment to strengthen and deepen vocational exploration and discernment on their campuses, both in the classroom and in other areas of student life.

Additional information about NetVUE—including its purposes, programs, and services—is available on the CIC website at www.cic.edu/NetVUE.

Not Yet a Member of NetVUE?

CIC welcomes the participation of additional independent colleges and universities in NetVUE. Institutions that join NetVUE gain access to a wide array of resources, programs, and services, and are immediately eligible to send a three-person team to the NetVUE Conference with registration fees waived. Additional information about NetVUE membership, including an application to join, is available at www.cic.edu/NetVUE. Please complete the online membership application prior to submitting your team’s conference registration. For questions about NetVUE, please contact David S. Cunningham, director of NetVUE, at dcunningham@cis.nche.edu or (616) 395-6750.

PARTICIPATING IN YOUR FIRST NETVUE CONFERENCE?

If this is your first NetVUE Conference, you are not alone! Over the course of NetVUE’s history, approximately half of the participants in each biennial conference have been new to the network, or at least new to the event. The conference is known for the energy of its participants and an extremely full program, so first-time participants are strongly encouraged to arrive by midday on Thursday in order to participate in a special orientation session. New participants will be introduced to the network, its staff, and its programs and services. This session will offer guidance for approaching the NetVUE Conference and bringing its insights home to campus. It also will provide an excellent opportunity for newcomers to get to know others. Please join us at 2:00 p.m. on Thursday, March 24, for this important orientation session.

THE PARADOX OF EDUCATION AND THE CALL TO BE AGENTS OF CHANGE

In 1963, James Baldwin delivered his famous “A Talk to Teachers” (originally, “The Negro Child—His Self-Image”) to an audience of educators. His words are still relevant to the educational environment of today, which is being called to address generational poverty, inequity, and institutional racism—what Baldwin called being “born in the shadow of the stars and stripes.” Baldwin spoke of “the paradox of education”: that education is designed to socialize one into the basic structure of society as it is, yet it is also designed to make students into critical thinkers. What does that contradiction mean to Black and Brown college students who are observing the ugliness in the worlds from which many of them come? How does this paradox shape their process of discernment of their own callings, and those of their peers of all races, to address the needs and hopes of those worlds? How are we, as educators, being called to create an environment that refuses to socialize students into the structures of inequity and oppression, instead preparing them to expose, criticize, and change those structures? This is a time for educators, whom Baldwin called “those who deal with the minds and hearts of young people,” to become agents for societal change—and to help students discern their own paths for doing so as well.

Eddie S. Glaude, Jr. is the James S. McDonnell Distinguished University Professor and chair of the Department of African American Studies at Princeton University. As an author, political commentator, public intellectual, and passionate educator, he focuses on the complex dynamics of the American experience. He is a widely respected scholar of religious studies and has served on the board of the American Academy of Religion, including a term as president in 2017. His books on religion and philosophy include An Uncommon Faith: A Pragmatic Approach to the Study of African American Religion (2018), African American Religion: A Very Short Introduction (2016), and Exodus! Religion, Race, and Nation in Early Nineteenth-Century Black America (2000), which was awarded the Modern Language Association’s William Sanders Scarborough Book Prize. Glaude also writes books for a wider audience, including his recent Begin Again: James Baldwin’s America and Its Urgent Lessons for Our Own (2020), as well as Democracy in Black: How Race Still Enslaves the American Soul (2016) and In a Shade of Blue: Pragmatism and the Politics of Black America (2007). These works offer a broad account of Black communities, the difficulties of race in the United States, and the challenges that this country faces as a democracy. Glaude frequently appears in the media—as a columnist for TIME Magazine, an MSNBC contributor on programs such as Morning Joe, and as a regular guest on Meet the Press. He holds a BA from Morehouse College, an MA in African American studies from Temple University, and a PhD in religion from Princeton University.
FRIDAY, MARCH 25, 8:45–10:15 A.M.
PLENARY ADDRESS AND SMALL-GROUP DISCUSSION

INTERRELIGIOUS SCRIPTURAL REASONING AS A VOCATIONAL PRACTICE

More than ever before, cultural and religious literacy are essential for all those seeking to live into their callings in life. These capacities are required for public work in the political sphere, medicine, law, education, and for the work of corporations and nongovernmental organizations. The vocational trajectories of everyone in higher education—students, staff, faculty members, and administrators—increasingly require us to attend to what shapes one another’s deepest commitments and practices. Although not all campuses have the resources to make intercultural and interreligious engagements a routine part of the collegiate experience, they can easily facilitate productive encounters with the key texts of a variety of religious traditions. The practice of Scriptural Reasoning (www.scripturalreasoning.org) focuses on reading such texts together to stimulate conversation, empathy, and insight. This practice has developed over more than 20 years across several continents, with centers of practice and research in 12 countries, encompassing many languages and traditions. This plenary session will provide an introduction to Scriptural Reasoning and will guide participants through its actual practice in small groups, facilitated by NetVUE leaders with experience in this work. The session will conclude with guidance for implementing the practice of Scriptural Reasoning on campus and an assessment of its value for vocational reflection and discernment among undergraduate students. Participants will have the opportunity to learn more about bringing Scriptural Reasoning to their own institutional settings in a concurrent session following the plenary gathering (see page 10).

Nicholas Adams is professor of philosophical theology at the University of Birmingham in England. He began his academic career as an expert on German Idealism and its impact on Christian theology, writing on the work of Jürgen Habermas (Habermas and Theology, 2006) and G. W. F. Hegel (Eclipse of Grace: Divine and Human Action in Hegel, 2013). His recent work has additionally focused on philosophical problems in interreligious engagement, especially around knowledge, truth, and argument. He approaches interreligious engagement as a set of practices that operate in “the middle distance” between broad, universal visions and the specificity of the local. Scriptural Reasoning is an element of his own research, as well as that of the doctoral students whom he supervises. Adams earned a BA in theology and religious studies and a PhD in theology and German philosophy, both from the University of Cambridge. After holding a Junior Research Fellowship at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, and a lectureship at the University of Edinburgh, he took up his current post at the University of Birmingham in 2015.
Higher education has long been considered a bellwether of secularization. Commentators have largely accepted the prognosis that the once vibrant ties between the church and the academy, and more broadly between religion and higher learning, have frayed—propelling the American campus toward a wholly secular future. Such a shift would seem to have significant implications for issues surrounding vocation and calling, since these issues are often (even if not always or necessarily) intertwined with questions of religious faith. But the prevailing view of higher education’s secular shift has been upended with new research documenting the vitality of religion on many American campuses. Religion has staged a comeback at colleges and universities—even if this change has been uneven and complex, with growing attention to the sacred and to spirituality (and a much broader awareness of religious pluralism). How will vocation-related programs address these changes, in light of their own secular and religious commitments? How will the differing assumptions of faculty members, staff, and students affect this work? The resilience of religion in higher education has significant implications for those who are charged with guiding students as they explore their many callings in life.

Kathleen A. Mahoney is senior program officer for global development at GHR Foundation in Minneapolis, Minnesota, where her portfolio focuses on the nexus of faith and the well-being of children. She previously served as the president of Porticus North America Foundation, and has provided consulting services for other foundations. Mahoney has served on the boards of the Cristo Rey Network, L’Arche USA, and the Louisville Institute. Her academic background is in the field of education. She was a faculty member at the Lynch School of Education at Boston College, where she wrote the award-winning book Catholic Higher Education in Protestant America (2003) and founded the Institute for Administrators in Catholic Higher Education. More recently, she co-authored The Resilience of Religion in American Higher Education with John A. Schmalzbauer (2018). Mahoney holds a BA in religious studies from the University of Toronto, an MA in theology from the University of Notre Dame, and a PhD in education from the University of Rochester.
Blog, Webinar, Podcast: New Media Resources for Vocation

New media resources have had an increasing impact on higher education over the past decade, and this trend has only intensified during the pandemics of the past year. Blogs, webinars, online workshops, and podcasts have become standard fare on every campus and within every academic organization. How can these resources be used to strengthen vocation-related initiatives? What are the advantages and drawbacks of various media for professional development and student programming? A panel of experienced users of new media in the academic context will lead participants in an exploration of methodologies, best practices, and lessons learned.

Books on Vocation for the Undergraduate Setting

As the literature on vocation and calling has expanded, educators at NetVUE member institutions have found themselves faced with a panoply of choices for student assignments. But how much of the current vocation literature is well suited for use with undergraduates? What features should one consider when assessing these resources and assigning them in the academic context? Are some readings and resources particularly useful in the classroom, while others are best employed in co-curricular settings (residence hall groups, athletic teams, student clubs, religious life programming)? In this session, four authors who have written books suitable for the undergraduate setting will offer recommendations of other books that can stimulate and supplement vocational conversations among students, both within and outside the classroom.

Jacqueline A. Bussie, Executive Director, Collegeville Institute for Ecumenical and Cultural Research
Jason A. Mahn, Conrad Bergendoff Chair in the Humanities, and Director, Presidential Center for Faith and Learning, Augustana College (IL)

Patrick B. Reyes, Senior Director of Learning Design, Forum for Theological Exploration
Bringing Scriptural Reasoning to Campus

As a sequel to Friday morning’s plenary session on Scriptural Reasoning (see page 7), this session will provide more detailed suggestions as to how this practice might be employed in the college or university setting. Attention will be paid to the specifics of implementing Scriptural Reasoning among different campus constituencies, including faculty members, staff, administrators, and students. Facilitators will also guide participants in the use of additional resources (many of which are available online) for choosing appropriate texts, training facilitators, encouraging participation, and assessing outcomes.

Nicholas Adams, Professor of Philosophical Theology, University of Birmingham
Emily A. Filler, Assistant Professor of Religious Studies, Washington & Lee University
Stephen E. Fowl, Professor of Theology and Dean of Loyola College of Arts and Sciences, Loyola University Maryland

Called to Create Just Futures

How can academic inquiry and community partnerships inform public policy on racial justice? How might undergraduate students be brought into this conversation and encouraged to explore their own callings to this work? What programs and activities can help students understand the issues and seek practical ways to respond? These questions will be addressed by leaders at CIC and NetVUE member institutions that are part of the Just Futures initiative of the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation. Nine colleges and universities, including five CIC/NetVUE members, have designed projects that bring researchers and community activists together to examine the history of racial injustice in the institution’s community, assess its impact on contemporary inequities, and make recommendations for reparative policies to local and regional governments. Panelists will explain why they are participating in this initiative, describe the focus and progress of their projects, and consider how this work might relate to vocational exploration and discernment on their campuses.

New Scholarship on Vocation and the Common Good

The three volumes published thus far through the NetVUE Scholarly Resources Project have been widely used in NetVUE institutions to introduce faculty members, staff, and administrators to conversations on vocation and calling. These books have served as an introduction for newcomers, as a means of deeper engagement for faculty and staff reading groups, and as resources in the undergraduate classroom. NetVUE has now begun work on a fourth volume, which will focus on vocation and the common good. In this session, the new director of the Scholarly Resources Project will lead an interview-style discussion among five of the contributors to the forthcoming volume, focusing not only on their individual essays but also on the themes of the book as a whole. Participants will have an opportunity to offer suggestions as to the shape and content of the volume as it comes into final form.

Jonathan Golden, Assistant Professor of Anthropology and Comparative Religion, and Director, Center on Religion, Culture, and Conflict, Drew University
Michelle Hayford, Associate Professor of Theatre and Director, Theatre, Dance, and Performance Technology Program, University of Dayton
Robert Pampel, Director, University Honors Program, Saint Louis University
Meghan M. Slining, Associate Professor of Health Sciences, Furman University
Monica M. Smith, Vice President of Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion, Augustana College (IL)
Erin A. VanLaningham, Director, NetVUE Scholarly Resources Project, Council of Independent Colleges and Professor of English, Loras College

The first three NetVUE Scholarly Resources Project volumes are available on the Oxford University Press website and will be available in the NetVUE Conference bookstall.
Self-Assessment Instruments for Vocational Reflection

A number of instruments that are designed to help students explore their own gifts, talents, and strengths are available to faculty members and staff at NetVUE institutions. Many of these third-party resources have been used in offices of career services, first-year programs, and academic advising. How useful are these instruments as resources for genuine vocational reflection? When properly used, can they be an important first step for undergraduates who are beginning to consider their many callings in life? Or do they sometimes tend to become a substitute for more rigorous and hands-on vocational conversations? A panel of NetVUE leaders with experience of various instruments will offer advice on the best use of these resources for vocational exploration and discernment. Specific attention will be paid to StrengthsFinder, PathwayU, the Intercultural Development Inventory, and the Life Design/Career Construction instrument.

Bryan J. Dik, Professor of Psychology, Colorado State University–Fort Collins
Ramon J. Emmart, Director of Career Services, Friends University
David K. Miller, College Minister and Director of Justice Initiatives, Union College (KY)
Tracy Wenger Sadd, Former Chaplain and Executive Director, Purposeful Life Work and Ethical Leadership, Elizabethtown College
Kassia Waggoner, Assistant Professor of Composition, Friends University

Storytelling and Vocation: Institutional and Personal

NetVUE leaders are often called upon to articulate the role of vocation and calling within their institutions—and in the lives of their colleagues and their students. Doing so requires not only the capacity to marshal the necessary information but also the ability to deliver the story in an engaging and encouraging way. Some people have a gift for telling a story well, but storytelling can also be taught; in fact, at least one NetVUE institution has developed a curriculum for teaching the art of storytelling. In this session, several talented storytellers (and teachers of storytelling) will relate their own experiences in this area and offer advice for telling the vocational story, both for individuals and for institutions. This session will be particularly useful for those who lead NetVUE grants or other vocational exploration programs and who have responsibilities for helping others understand the significance of this work.

Joshua Canada, Director of Strategic Partnerships, Azusa Pacific University
Janice M. Del Negro, Professor of Information Studies, Dominican University (IL)
Claire M. Noonan, Vice President for Mission and Planning, Dominican University (IL)
Vocation and the Religiously (In)Different Student

An increasing percentage of undergraduate students at NetVUE institutions have grown up in faith communities other than the ones that have traditionally marked the college or university that they attend. Other students—perhaps a yet larger number—find themselves at the margins of (or completely outside of) traditional religious communities. Although the language of vocation and calling is certainly employed in secular as well as religious contexts, some students may assume that vocational reflection is primarily a religious (and often a specifically Christian) undertaking. How might educators help these religiously different (or indifferent) students recognize the importance of vocational reflection? Three NetVUE leaders who have worked with students who embrace a variety of lifestances will offer advice and resources for bringing these students into the conversation about vocation and calling.

Florence D. Amamoto, Professor Emerita of English, Japanese Studies, and Gender, Women, and Sexuality Studies, Gustavus Adolphus College
Younus Y. Mirza, Director of Global Virtual Learning and Religion Scholar in Residence, Shenandoah University
Matthew R. Sayers, Professor of Religion and Director of Religion and Philosophy, Lebanon Valley College

Vocation beyond the Undergraduate Setting

The focus of NetVUE has traditionally been on undergraduate students. Nevertheless, even those member institutions with an exclusively baccalaureate academic program have important constituencies that fall outside the traditional “undergraduate” realm. These include the institution’s graduates, members of the local community, faculty and staff retirees, and prospective students (and their parents). How might NetVUE member institutions extend the conversation about vocation and calling to these constituencies? How might this work also serve as an additional resource for undergraduates who are discerning their own callings? Three academic administrators will describe initiatives and perspectives that can help broaden the scope of vocation and calling beyond the undergraduate setting to those in all stages and walks of life. The panelists will also discuss the impact that this work can have on current students.

Paul C. Pribbenow, President, Augsburg University
Shirley H. Showalter, Former President, Goshen College
Rueben C. Warren, Director, National Center for Bioethics in Research and Health Care, Tuskegee University
Surveys of participants in past NetVUE Conferences have indicated a desire for a slightly longer conference and more opportunities to gather in smaller groups. In response to this expression of interest, NetVUE will offer, for the first time, pre- and post-conference workshops for those who are able to arrive a day early or stay through Saturday afternoon. Four options are being offered as a pilot program this year: two that will begin on the day preceding the conference (continuing through lunch on the following day), and two that will take place on Saturday afternoon, after the conference concludes.

These workshops require pre-registration as space is limited. Registration is open to anyone also registered for the NetVUE Conference. An additional registration fee covers materials and refreshments (and, in the case of the pre-conference workshops, meals and overnight lodging at the conference hotel). Please pre-register for these events on the CIC website, www.cic.edu/2022NetVUEConference. If you have already registered and would like to add a pre- or post-conference workshop to an existing registration, please contact Tabitha Truscott, CIC conference and program manager, at ttruscott@ cic.nche.edu.

Bringing Vocation into the Classroom

Darby K. Ray, Donald W. and Ann M. Harward Professor of Civic Engagement and Professor of Religious Studies, Bates College

Paul J. Wadell, Professor Emeritus of Theology and Religious Studies, St. Norbert College

One of the most promising ways that faculty members can serve their students is to introduce them to the subject of vocation. Faculty members have the opportunity to guide students in the exploration of their respective vocations; to help them prove questions of meaning, purpose, and identity; and to consider the contributions that they can make to society—and to do so from a variety of perspectives, including the theological and the ethical.
This pre-conference workshop aims to strengthen the teaching of vocational exploration by considering content and teaching methods for courses that focus on vocational exploration. Discussions also will focus on how social, cultural, and institutional dynamics both facilitate and hinder living out one’s vocation. In preparation for the workshop, participants will be expected to read selected materials on vocation and submit a brief written reflection. They can expect to leave the workshop with concrete plans for a new or redesigned course or course materials that will incorporate vocational exploration into the classroom.

(Note: Each summer, NetVUE offers a weeklong faculty seminar, Teaching Vocational Exploration, that covers these topics and many more. That event, however, is limited to early- and mid-career faculty who are nominated by their chief academic officer, with priority given to nominees from institutions that have not yet participated in the seminar. By contrast, this workshop is open to all faculty members at NetVUE institutions on a first-come, first-served basis. The workshop is strictly limited to 16 participants.)

Vocation and Career: Helping Students Ask the Right Questions

Lisa Hinkley, Associate Vice President and Executive Director for Career and Professional Development, Carthage College
Dee Pierce, Director, Center for Vocation and Career, Wheaton College (IL)

As they enter college, students often find themselves in an unfamiliar place, surrounded by people they have never met who regularly ask some rather probing questions: What are you going to study? What kind of job are you planning to get when you graduate? Where will you live, and with whom? What kind of life will you have as a result?

Faced with a barrage of challenging questions about their future lives, undergraduate students need the opportunity to develop a clear vision of themselves and their experiences, interests, and skills. They prosper when they are relieved of some of the pressure that they feel to find the “one thing” they are supposed to do (and are often desperate to discover). They need to be given the time and space to explore the multitude of paths that lead to a life of meaning and purpose.

This pre-conference workshop is intended to help college and university professionals guide students in asking the right questions. Through presentations and interactive conversations, it will challenge participants to think more holistically about their own callings and will equip them to help students do the same, using such tools as easy-to-access online assessments and reflective exercises designed specifically for undergraduates. The workshop will be of particular interest to those who work in career services, student advisors and supervisors, faculty members, and anyone else who engages students in deep questions about the meaning of life, the role of faith, and their hopes (and fears) about the future. Participants will leave the workshop with a range of resources for guiding vocational conversations in a productive and encouraging way.
Measuring Impact: Demonstrating the Value of Vocation-Related Initiatives

Tim Clydesdale, Vice Provost, Dean of Graduate Studies, and Professor of Sociology, The College of New Jersey

Lisa Jasinski, Special Assistant to the Vice President for Academic Affairs, Trinity University (TX)

Educators recognize the centrality of data to academic decision-making, assessing program initiatives, showcasing successes, and addressing shortcomings. But not all educators have the background and resources to undertake this work, and not all assessment tools work for the entire range of vocation-related activities—from faculty workshops and in-classroom activities to co-curricular initiatives in student affairs, career services, or campus ministry.

This Saturday afternoon workshop will offer guiding principles and practical tips for those tasked with designing, directing, and assessing vocation-related programming. Participants will leave equipped with tools to demonstrate how well their programs achieve their stated goals. The workshop will focus on helping NetVUE leaders demonstrate the connections between vocation-related initiatives and their institution’s strategic priorities, including improved retention and graduation rates. Throughout the workshop, participants will work collaboratively, developing action plans that they can take back to campus, with the goal of quickly initiating or improving evaluation efforts in their vocation-related programming.
Promoting Vocational Exploration among Minoritized Students

Chris Arguedas, Director, Intercultural Community Center, and Special Assistant to the President for Equity and Justice, Occidental College

Kiki Kosnick, Assistant Professor of World Languages, Literatures, and Cultures, Augustana College (IL)

Richard Sévère, Associate Professor and Chair, Department of English, Valparaiso University

Over the past two decades, programs to help students explore vocation and calling have had a significant impact on their collegiate experience, their career decisions, and the future direction of their lives. Unfortunately, however, the absorption of these programs among undergraduates has been dramatically uneven. In particular, at many institutions, students from minoritized groups participate in vocational exploration and discernment programming at a much lower rate than is the case for other identity groups.

In this Saturday afternoon workshop, participants will explore some of the reasons for this phenomenon: structural inequities that are built into many academic institutions, well-intentioned pedagogies that miss the mark, and messages that minoritized students have received throughout their lives—long before arriving at college. Most of the workshop will focus on practical steps to create vocation-related programs that are appropriate for the particular circumstances of minoritized students, making it possible for them to take full advantage of these opportunities. Workshop leaders will encourage participants to explore their own institutions’ practices—those that facilitate this work, as well as those that may be creating obstacles (no matter how unintentionally). Participants will also exchange best practices for developing programs that avoid creating a culture of mainstream and margins, but instead provide a “free and ordered space” in which all students can participate on an equal footing.
Participating institutions are invited to develop a concurrent session presentation about any aspect of vocational exploration and discernment. Ideas and programs that emerge from campus experiences linked to NetVUE programs, grants, campus visits, faculty seminars, or other initiatives are especially encouraged, as are presentations that intersect with this year’s conference theme, “Called into Community: Vocation, Engagement, and Difference.” Presentations may focus on any facet of vocation, whether from the perspective of a curricular program in an academic discipline (theology, ethics, literature, psychology, or any other field, or across disciplines) or in relation to campus activities in advising and mentoring, career development, campus ministry, community engagement, or any other campus venue where vocational exploration takes place. Proposals may share effective practices, emerging opportunities, or assessment of what has worked well—and what could be improved—for campus vocational exploration programs.

Please Note: In a change from previous NetVUE Conferences, this year’s proposal selection process will be a competitive one. Fewer than 30 one-hour slots are available for campus presentations from NetVUE’s 270 member institutions. (For a point of comparison, the 2019 NetVUE Conference drew over 70 proposals, resulting in the need to combine campus sessions and to create a densely-packed schedule.) Campus teams whose proposals cannot be accommodated may be invited to convert their plans into a breakfast roundtable discussion or a poster that can be displayed in the common areas at the conference.

Proposals will be evaluated and selected according to the following criteria:

1. Relevance and interest level for other NetVUE member institutions;
2. Evidence of forethought and consideration in the creation of the proposal;
3. Likely appeal of presentation methods (including audio-visual elements, if planned);
4. Contribution of the topic and presenters to the diversity of the NetVUE Conference; and
5. Adherence to the proposal guidelines for a complete application (below).

Proposals that combine presenters from two or more NetVUE institutions are especially encouraged. (In such cases, please submit only one combined proposal and identify one institution as taking the lead for purposes of communication and logistics.)

GUIDELINES FOR SUBMITTING A CONCURRENT SESSION PROPOSAL

Presentation proposals should include a plan for a one-hour session, including 15–20 minutes of presentation (somewhat more if small-group discussion is integrated into the presentation), complemented by a time for questions and discussion with session participants. To propose a concurrent session presentation, please submit a single document, not to exceed three pages in 12-point font, covering all seven of the points in the list below. (Please copy the boldface section labels into your document so that the completeness of your proposal can be easily recognized.)

1. Title that describes the presentation topic or theme;
2. Names and position titles of those who are expected to make the presentation;
3. Biographies of each presenter, in the required size and style (available on the NetVUE Conference website);

4. Public description (four to five sentences) of the proposed content, suitable for publication in the conference program;

5. Session details (two to three paragraphs) describing the session’s content, method of presentation, and any audio-visual plans (a preliminary version of any expected slide presentation is encouraged and may be attached as a separate file);

6. Discussion questions designed to encourage conversation among session participants; and

7. Diversity considerations, specifically, a statement of how the proposed session will contribute to the diversity of issues, participants, and perspectives at the NetVUE Conference.

Concurrent session proposals should be submitted by email as a single attachment (optionally, a tentative slide presentation may be included as a second attachment) and sent to Lynne Spoelhof, NetVUE program manager, at lspoelhof@cic.nche.edu.

DEADLINE FOR PROPOSAL SUBMISSION: NOVEMBER 12, 2021
An Ongoing Conversation

As a learning community, NetVUE supports member campuses as they help students discover, explore, and wrestle with their callings. Learning communities flourish when members share common readings, join in mutual conversations, and compare their perspectives. At the 2022 NetVUE Conference, the initiatives described below are designed to stimulate and strengthen the NetVUE community of reflection and discernment.

PRE-CONFERENCE READINGS

Prior to the conference, participants will be invited to read a small selection of materials to help focus discussions throughout the event. Access to these readings will be provided several months in advance of the conference.

SMALL DISCUSSION GROUPS

On Thursday afternoon and during Friday’s lunch, participants will meet in pre-designated small groups, designed to create new relationships among those who share various commonalities but who might not yet have met. Friday and Saturday breakfast sessions also will provide opportunities for discussions about specific topics related to vocation and calling. The primary purpose of these conversations is to compare and contrast approaches to vocational reflection and discernment and to consider how vocation-related initiatives can be sustained over time.

NETWORKING AND COHORTS

One of the most important goals of the NetVUE Conference is to stimulate and strengthen the development of networks across member institutions. Many sessions are designed to introduce participants to individuals on other campuses that share certain commonalities with one another, whether institutional (size, type, setting, religious affiliation) or individual (position, campus role, portfolio, on-campus networks). Participants are encouraged to make use of these opportunities—both within and outside of formal sessions—for networking and for the creation and development of cross-campus cohorts for mutual support.

FORUMS FOR PRESIDENTS AND CHIEF ACADEMIC OFFICERS

Presidents and chief academic officers are invited to take part in candid conversations regarding changing institutional contexts and approaches to broaden and sustain vocational exploration initiatives while attending to institutional mission and resources. Presidents will gather on Friday morning and chief academic officers on Saturday morning for these discussions. In each case, two NetVUE member leaders in these roles will facilitate the discussion.
Meetings of Organizational Members and Affinity Groups

NetVUE provides opportunities for formal and informal meetings of other groups in conjunction with the NetVUE Conference. Meetings scheduled thus far are listed on this page.

ASSOCIATION OF CATHOLIC COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES invites conference participants from member institutions to meet Thursday, March 24, 11:30 a.m.–1:30 p.m., for lunch and discussion. Those planning to attend should send an email to Rebecca Sawyer at rsawyer@accunet.org.

Coordinator: Dennis H. Holtschneider, President and Chief Executive Officer, Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities

ASSOCIATION OF PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES will host a retreat for presidents from Tuesday, March 22, through the morning of Thursday, March 24, at the HALL Arts Hotel, located two blocks from the Sheraton Dallas Hotel. Presbyterian chaplains are tentatively scheduled to join the retreat for a joint session that will take place on Thursday, March 24, at the Sheraton Dallas Hotel.

Coordinator: Jeffrey E. Arnold, Executive Director, Association of Presbyterian Colleges and Universities

EXECUTIVES IN CHURCH-RELATED HIGHER EDUCATION will meet Wednesday, March 23, 6:00–8:00 p.m., for dinner and discussion.

Coordinator: Mark N. Wilhelm, Executive Director, Network of Colleges and Universities, Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA)

NETWORK OF ELCA COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES invites conference participants from member institutions to meet Thursday, March 24, 11:00 a.m.–1:30 p.m., for lunch and discussion. Those planning to attend should send an email to Melinda Valverde at melinda.valverde@elca.org.

Coordinator: Mark N. Wilhelm, Executive Director, Network of Colleges and Universities, Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA)

If your group would like to be added to this schedule, please contact Lynne Spoelhof, NetVUE program manager, at lspoelhof@cic.nche.edu.
Hotel and Travel Information

Sheraton Dallas Hotel, 400 North Olive Street, Dallas, TX 75201, Phone: (214) 922-8000

Room Rate: $184 single/double per night
Hotel Reservation Deadline: February 15, 2022

Please note: Participants must make their own hotel reservations after registering for the NetVUE Conference. The hotel room rate for conference dates (Thursday and Friday nights) is included with conference registration.

The Sheraton Dallas Hotel is located in the heart of the arts and financial district of downtown Dallas and has been recently renovated. The hotel features several dining options (including a Grab ‘n Go market), an outdoor pool, and a fitness center, in addition to 1,840 renovated guest rooms. DART light rail offers easy access from the hotel to Dallas’s vibrant entertainment districts, including the Arts District, Uptown, and Deep Ellum. The hotel also is within walking distance of the Dallas Museum of Art, Dallas World Aquarium, and the John Fitzgerald Kennedy Memorial.

Hotel Reservation Procedure

Participants must first register for the NetVUE Conference (see page 24) in order to make a hotel reservation. After registration, participants will receive a confirmation email that includes detailed instructions and a code to make a reservation at the Sheraton Dallas Hotel. CIC will cover the expense of the first three team members’ hotel rooms for the nights of March 24 and 25. The registration fee for fourth and fifth team members already includes payment of the discounted hotel room rate of $184 single/double per night for these two nights. (For those who have registered and paid for a pre-conference workshop, the night of Wednesday, March 23 is also included.)

Participants are responsible for making their own hotel reservations.

The hotel reservation deadline is Tuesday, February 15, 2022. Hotel rooms may sell out before the deadline, so participants are encouraged to register for the conference and reserve their hotel rooms as soon as possible. Please note that hotel reservations made after the deadline can only be accommodated on a space-available basis and may be at a rate higher than the CIC rate.

Participants who wish to extend their stay beyond the conference dates may do so at their own expense. A limited number of rooms are available at the conference rate for an extended stay. Please call the Sheraton Dallas Hotel at (214) 922-8000 to make arrangements.

Additional hotel and reservation information is available at www.cic.edu/2022NetVUEConference.

Travel Costs

Please note that travel expenses of all team members are the responsibility of individuals or their institutions. A limited number of travel grants are available to NetVUE member colleges and universities with limited resources or with unusually high travel expenses. To inquire about a travel grant, please contact David S. Cunningham, director of NetVUE, at dccunningham@cic.nche.edu or (616) 395-6750.

Transportation

The Sheraton Dallas Hotel is located approximately eight miles from Dallas Love Field Airport (DAL) and approximately 19 miles (25 minutes) from Dallas Fort Worth International Airport (DFW). Transportation to the hotel is available from several providers that are located just outside the baggage claim area of each airport.

More detailed information about transportation options from both airports may be found at www.cic.edu/2022NetVUEConference.

Estimated rideshare and taxi fares are $25 to $30 one-way from Dallas Love Field and $35 to $55 one-way from Dallas Fort Worth International Airport.

Hotel Parking (as of July 2021)

Self-parking at the Sheraton Dallas Hotel is discounted at approximately $19 per day and overnight valet parking is about $35 per day. Taxes are included with these rates.

TO-DO LIST

1. If you are not yet a NetVUE member: apply for NetVUE membership
2. Register for the NetVUE conference
3. Book your hotel room(s)
4. Submit session proposals
Registration Information

Please Note: Conference participants are encouraged to register early as space is limited.

Each NetVUE institution may register a team of three to five members. For the first three team members, all conference costs (including a single hotel room for two nights, conference meals, and program materials) are covered by the institution’s NetVUE membership. Up to two additional team members may register at the institution’s expense. Please note that each team should include the president, chief academic officer, or another officer at the vice-presidential level. Institutions are encouraged to compose campus teams that contribute to the diversity of the NetVUE Conference and whose members have expertise in working with diverse student populations.

The team leader may register teams of up to five members online using the team leader’s login and password. If you do not have a CIC password or cannot recall it, or if you are not signed up in the CIC registration system, please use the “Forgot your username/password or need to create an account?” link. To register, visit www.cic.edu/2022NetVUEConference.

To complete the team’s registration, please select the “Pay by Check” option. (No payment is due, however, for the first three team members.) Confirmation of your registration will automatically be sent by email to each member of the team. If you do not receive an email confirmation within ten days, please contact Tabitha Truscott, CIC conference and program manager, by phone at (202) 466-7260 or by email at ttruscott@ cic.nche.edu.

As noted on page 22, participants must make their own hotel reservations. After registering for the conference, participants will receive a confirmation email that includes detailed reservation instructions and a reservation code for the Sheraton Dallas Hotel. Early registration is encouraged as space is limited.

FOURTH AND FIFTH TEAM MEMBER REGISTRATION

Institutions may register fourth and fifth team members at the institution’s expense. The registration fee for additional team members is:

- $950 per person, including conference materials, meals, and a single hotel room; or
- $625 per person, including conference materials, meals, and a double hotel room shared with another registered conference participant.

Please note that fourth and fifth team members may be registered at the same time as the rest of the campus team.

REGISTRATION CHANGES AND CANCELLATIONS

Because CIC has made prior commitments to the hotel for lodging, meals, and meeting space, please make changes in conference registration as far in advance as possible. Cancellation or substitution requests should be sent via email to Lynne Spoelhof, NetVUE program manager, (lspoelhof@ cic.nche.edu) no later than February 15, 2022. Substitutions are greatly preferred over cancellations whenever possible. All cancellations made after February 15 will incur a $200 cancellation fee.

Please note that hotel reservations must be canceled directly with the hotel. Charges for hotel rooms not canceled by February 28, 2022, including “no shows,” will be the responsibility of the institution.
